

A GREAT place to work

“ I am passionate about working with others to make a difference. I know that FBA’s focus on improved land management will, over time, improve water quality, reduce soil loss and decrease the sediment run off going out to the Great Barrier Reef. ”

Nathan Johnston
Regional Coordinator, Water Quality

“The job is well paid, the working hours are flexible and the organisation encourages and supports professional development.”

Jill Lyons, Regional Facilitator

“I enjoy meeting enthusiastic people and facilitating community groups who are keen to make a positive difference, to protect our natural environment.”

Shane Westley, Coastal and Marine Coordinator

Where is the Fitzroy Basin?

Located in Central Queensland, the Fitzroy Basin is a vast region, covering approximately 156 000 square km of land with the largest river system draining to the east coast of Australia.

Over the past ten years, FBA has worked with primary producers on over 700 properties covering almost 20% of the catchment area.

What do we do?

FBA's work is as diverse as the people we employ. Our staff are involved in hands-on activities, which include visiting properties and working with land managers on-ground, measuring Brigalow regrowth, restoring wetlands, preparing soil samples, monitoring water quality, helping protect rare plant and animal species, and much more.

Who are we looking for?

FBA employs people with a mixture of practical experience and tertiary qualifications.

Science degrees predominate, such as Biology, Environmental, Forestry, Natural Systems, Wildlife, Zoology, Microbiology, Agriculture, Aquatic Resource Management and Rural Technology.

"I am excited and inspired by the approach that the FBA takes on empowering communities and having a holistic approach to our rural communities as well as natural resource management."
